

MINE STRIKE GROWS MORE OMINOUS; MINES CONTINUE TO CLOSE

Eyes of Nation Turn Expectantly Toward Washington For Action

FURNACES ARE COOLING

New Sympathy Strikes On; Charge Strikers "Acting Under Instructions"

Minute by precious minute the captive mine strike grew more ominous today.

Each passing moment saw new mines closed, additional thousands of skilled men in non-productive idleness while giant shovels bit deeper into fast-dwindling coal piles at defense-vital steel mills. Blast furnaces in these mills already are being cooled and blown out by lack of fuel.

Eyes of the nation turned expectantly toward Washington. Coal means steel and steel means defense—they go hand in hand—and a defense-minded public waited for some indication of what action President Roosevelt will take to lighten the paralyzing strike grip laid upon soft coal area by John L. Lewis.

In the field tempers were fraying toward the ragged edge on both sides. Shots fired in anger have claimed victims. Only by pure luck have fatalities been avoided. The next outbreak may bring death to the picket line or to the non-striking ranks.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 19.—Four of its 21 operating blast furnaces in the Pittsburgh district today were ordered "banked immediately" by Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation, "big steel" operating subsidiary because of dwindling coal stocks.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 19.—John L. Lewis' strike grip on the nation's captive coal mines tightened measurably today as the strike fever spread from mine to mine in the rich bituminous coal region with each passing hour.

New sympathy strikes in commercial mines of both West Virginia and Pennsylvania were reported coupled with a charge that the strikers were "acting under instructions."

In Western Pennsylvania the giant Pittsburgh Coal Company—reputedly the world's largest commercial coal concern—had roughly half its mines closed by sympathy strikes.

In Johnstown, Pa., three new strikes involving 1400 additional commercial miners were reported.

H. C. McAllister, executive director of the Local Coal Operators Association in West Virginia, charged that sympathy strikers were acting on union orders. He said:

"I have talked with many coal operators in the Local field and without exception they have informed me that Melvin Triola, one of the district UMW representatives, 'had been sent to their operations and had instructed the men to cease work immediately.'"

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

Suckers

Washington, Nov. 18. IN the light of recent events, it does seem almost unbelievable that the American people as a whole should not grasp the degree to which they are being whipsawed and humbugged by the labor lobbyists and the Washington Administration. Certainly the manner in which the unctuous utterances of Mr. Philip Murray clash with his actions ought to make this clear to any sane the completely foggy-minded whom nothing can convince or enlighten.

PUT aside for the moment the defiant demands of Mr. Lewis, the action and speech of the President, along with other developments of the coal-mine crisis, and consider only Mr. Murray. Here are the facts about that gentleman: As head of the CIO he supported Mr. Roosevelt for a third term and was made a member of the President's National Defense Mediation Board. On various occasions he has made speeches extolling patriotism and declaring himself one hundred per cent behind the President and his program. But when Mr. Lewis imperiled that program by calling his closed-shop strike Mr. Murray promptly supported him. Also, despite the President's pleas in the name of national defense, Mr. Murray, as a member of the NLRB, not only voted for the closed-shop side but resigned when the board overwhelmingly decided against Mr. Lewis.

HERE is a man who first proclaims himself one hundred per cent behind the President and declares that nothing must be permitted to impede the flow of material to England and Russia. And then he promptly puts himself one hundred per cent behind a man who has called a strike which, the President says, threatens his program and aids the enemy.

ALBERT DOWDEN

DOWDEN TO PORTRAY LIFE OF HENRY ALDRICH

High School Play To Be Given in Auditorium Tomorrow and Friday Nights

TITLE IS "WHAT A LIFE"

Albert Dowden will have the role of Henry Aldrich in "What A Life" to be presented at Bristol high school in the auditorium on Thursday and Friday evenings at 8.15.

Henry Aldrich is a young boy of not yet 17 years old. He is a slow moving boy, who often gets into trouble. Although he means no harm in what he does, it seems that whatever he does, turns out to be trouble.

He is too influenced by his parents. He has a great talent or ability to draw. Yet, his parents insist that he should go to Princeton. Henry, who is easily led goes through his high school years with this one ambition in mind regardless of his one talent of art.

When in school, he is constantly in trouble. He seems to be in Mr. Bradley's office (the principal of the school) more than being in class. Reasons being, cheating from George Bigelow's paper during a history examination, and being accused of stealing the school's missing hand instrument.

FINDS CLASS RING OF BRISTOL WOMAN IN BOX OF SOAP CHIPS

Ring Returned To Owner By Resident of Potsdam, N. Y.

TRACED THRU SCHOOL

Owner Was Carmella M. Giagnacova, Who Graduated in 1930

A Bristol high school class ring lost 11 years ago was found in a box of soap chips made in Bristol and has been returned to the owner here by a resident of Potsdam, N. Y.

This unusual incident was revealed today when correspondence and details of the finding and return of the ring were revealed by David L. Hertzler, Bristol high school principal, and the owner of the ring, Mrs. Carmella Rocco, 1253 Radcliffe street.

A communication addressed to "Principal of High School, Bristol, Pa.," and dated September 18, 1941, was received here by Mr. Hertzler from G. F. Maxwell, 114 Market street, Potsdam, N. Y. In the letter Mr. Maxwell wrote:

"I wonder if you would be able to advise me in regard to a graduate of the Class of 1930 from your high school whose initials are C. M. G. 'I found the ring with the above initials in it and would like to return same to the owner and would appreciate any information you can give me. The ring was found in a box of soap chips and is a small size so would seem to belong to a girl.'"

Lardner V. Morris Buried In St. James' Churchyard

Lardner V. Morris, who died at his home on North Radcliffe street, Saturday, after a short illness, was buried in St. James' Churchyard, yesterday afternoon. The Rev. George E. Boswell, rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, officiated.

Mr. Morris was born in Bristol on July 17, 1870, and was educated at the Cheltenham Military Academy and at the Rittenhouse Academy in Pennsylvania.

He started his railroad career in January, 1889, as a rodman, his initial work being in connection with the surveys and construction of the Confluence and Oakland Railroad, along the Youghiogheny River in western Maryland, serving under the late Col. Joseph U. Crawford. In 1890 he entered the employ of the Pennsylvania Railroad System in the engineering department, under the jurisdiction of the engineer of branch lines. Between 1890 and 1902 he held various positions including that of assistant engineer, and during those 12 years was actively engaged on a number of important engineering projects.

In May, 1902, Mr. Morris was transferred from the Pennsylvania to the Long Island Railroad, acting as engineer in charge of special improvements for the reconstruction of the railroad. In 1904 he was assigned to the surveys and construction of what were known as the "Bay Ridge Improvements," extending from Fresh Pond to Manhattan Beach and Bay Ridge, now used in connection with the New York Connecting Railroad—the Hell Gate Bridge Route.

That undertaking involved building four-track tunnels through the heart of Brooklyn, abolition of many grade crossings, and elevation and depression of tracks for the entire distance. Later he was made chief engineer of the Bay Ridge Improvement. While the Bay Ridge work was in progress, Mr. Morris also assisted the late J. R. Savage, then Chief Engineer of the Long Island Railroad, in connection with the Jamaica Improvement, having had charge of all plans, surveys and designs.

In addition to his other duties, Mr. Morris was made Valuation Engineer of the Long Island Railroad in 1914. In this work he collaborated with the Valuation Committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. Morris succeeded Mr. Savage as Chief Engineer of the Long Island Railroad on October 1, 1917, and held that position until July 6, 1926, when he was promoted to the position of Consulting Engineer. He retired from active service with the railroad on July 1, 1933.

A number of railroad officials attended the funeral here yesterday afternoon, arriving in Bristol in a special coach attached to the train leaving New York at noon. They returned on the 3.29 from Bristol.

THE LABOR ISSUE

The main incentive that the administration has to halt the strikes in vital industries which are now threatened is that it is responsible for the laws under which the labor organizations are asserting their power. It handed an advantage to them under the Labor Relations Act—or in the way that act was administered—which they have turned to what they believe to be their profit and to what certainly is the administration's distress.

In accepting a labor campaign contribution of $500,000, the administration gave an implied pledge of sympathy which must have been used to assure prospective union members that their dues would not be paid in vain. The contribution was an investment, not a gift. And the labor leaders were not slow to make it pay dividends. They are today using it to force contracts for closed shops and deduction of dues from pay envelopes.

Railway employees are not directly favored by the Labor Relations Act, but come under a special law which is intended to avoid interruptions of railroad service and to provide a sympathetic hearing for their cause. This law was adopted prior to the present administration, but it is in the spirit of the administration's labor policy.

The President can take away the labor advantage that he was instrumental in extending. He has great power in this critical situation—so much power that the country looks to him not only for labor peace, but for labor peace in terms that are fair to all the people.

NOISE NUISANCE

Women, legend states, forgive the man who beats them, but never forgive the man who fails to hold the door open for them. This is profound wisdom. It is the minor matters that are unliking, not the major calamities. The destructive force of a hurricane is accepted as inevitable, and measures are taken to lessen the destructiveness. The dripping faucet is merely a nuisance.

Curiously, no move is made to eradicate the nuisances analogous to the dripping faucet. There is much talk and some anger. But there is largely inertia. Some one, so the argument seemingly runs, will do something about these lesser misdeeds some day. No one ever does anything about them, as a matter of fact.

Consequently, the days are made hideous by the unrelenting blowing of automobile horns by impatient motorists whose automobiling philosophy is a compound of haste and bad manners. The nights are made rancorous by youthful exhibitionists who prefer to think that downtown streets are the proper place for their celebrations and their shoutings. It is of no interest to them that their din may disturb a theatre audience, a concert audience, or a sober gathering of folk intent on hearing a speaker.

The business of suppressing such indecorous shenanigans is gingerly sidestepped. The racket, like the weather of Mark Twain's sally, is mentioned frequently, but nothing is done about it.

On the same day, as the CIO convention, Mr. Murray urged a resolution pledging "unqualified support" to John L. Lewis and then presented his report in which he pledged "unqualified support" to Mr. Roosevelt's policy of "all possible economic and material aid to the foes of Nazism"—two things obviously contradictory.

AND then, apparently just to make things more grotesque, Mr. Murray asserted that "the whole picture of the defense program so far has been one of chaotic administrative disorder." That is true, but it is strange it should come from Mr. Murray, who is part of the defense administration and an enthusiastic supporter of Mr. Roosevelt, who, after all, is responsible for this "chaotic administrative disorder," if anyone is. Thus, Mr. Murray takes his stand with the President and against him. He pledges devotion to his program and endorses the man. And then he joins a movement which would scuttle the program and voices a criticism that reflects on the man.

THE whole business is illogical, incredible and absurd. It does not make sense, and the final fantastic touch is Mr. Murray's contention that there is nothing inconsistent in his simultaneous support of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Lewis. That is pretty close to the peak of impudence, and it hardly can be based on any other assumption than that the American people, in the mass, are a lot of suckers. Perhaps they are. Certainly the sort of thing that, without protest, they have put up with in the last fifteen months is pretty strong evidence that they are.

IN that time they have listened, on one hand, to the President repeatedly declare that every ounce of our strength is needed to crush Hitler and that there must be no delay on defense work. On the other, they have heard his labor friends declare they are wholeheartedly with him. Yet the record shows that these "friends" have supported strikes on defense contracts which have lost more than 7,000,000 man days in ten months. All this time the President personally has stood in the way of passage by Congress of a law to end the delay. And he has insisted that there be no modification of existing restrictive labor acts.

AND Mrs. Roosevelt, to whom the labor bosses recently gave a testimonial banquet and who now, accompanied by her young protegee, Mr. Joseph Lash, regarded by the Dies committee as Communistically tainted, is making pious speeches for "civilian morale," not very long ago was going about the country encouraging strikers and expressing the hope that everybody would join a union. To make the thing complete, the President's NDMB, until it refused to go along with Mr. Lewis' closed-shop argument, had had an almost consistent record of giving the strikers all or most of their demands in every controversy with which it dealt. In some of these, their decisions promoted the very closed shop from which they now dissent.

UNTIL last week, not since November, 1940, has there been a real stand made by the President against the efforts of the labor bosses to use the crisis to enhance their power. His failure to face up to this fact almost caused the major disaster which defeat of his neutrality revision bill would have been. Now, when Congress and the country are aroused, and temporizing is no longer possible without confessing that a single labor leader is stronger than the Government, he is about to be prodded into strong speech and firm action. But the fact should not be forgotten that he neither spoke nor acted until he had no alternative. Nor should it be overlooked that, aside from the coal strike, there are in progress this week twenty-six other defense strikes, involving 13,000 men. Nothing is being done about them. Considering all these things, the charge that the American people are suckers is not easy to wave aside.

CHAPTER SIXTEEN

"Madame," said Sir John quietly, "neither you nor I need to fence with one another when both of us know the reason for this meeting."

Anne nodded, a smooth tendril of hair falling softly over her forehead and making her look even more immature.

"For that reason, Madame, I will not insult your intelligence," went on Meredith, "by making a roundabout approach. You have the Sulu-necklace belonging to your cousin, the Dwan. Or—you know where it is. Acting on his behalf, I am here to obtain the return of that necklace."

With the introduction of the necklace subject—and object—Anne recovered herself. Her expression was veiled as she asked, "But how do you propose to obtain its return, Sir John?"

"Then you acknowledge that you have it?" suggested Meredith, leaning forward to hold his lighter to her cigarette.

"I didn't say that," she said. "I wasn't thinking of your mission."

But after a brief pause, Anne suddenly said, "Certainly, I have it. It would be stupid to deny what you must at least guess. I have good claims to it."

"But you could be prosecuted for theft," he pointed out. When he stared more directly at her, she hastened to answer, "Of course."

There was a short silence broken by Anne as she leaned towards him. "You have not answered my question: How do you propose to obtain possession of the necklace? It is not here, of course."

"I didn't think it was," he assured her. "But I have the authority of someone who shall be nameless to offer to buy the necklace from you."

"To buy it?"

"To buy it?"

Anne de Vassignac frowned. To her mentality this form of approach had been quite unexpected. She scented a trap as she asked, "For how much?"

"As I see it," Meredith replied, "you control a stolen emerald necklace which you can't wear because it could be easily identified and, therefore, you would be prosecuted. You could break the necklace up and sell the stones separately and you could, I suppose, get something in the neighborhood of half a million for them. But, it would take time to sell such a number of stones and so I am here to relieve you of that period of waiting. I am authorized to offer you six hundred thousand pounds for the return of the necklace which is certainly a hundred thousand more than you could get for it."

She smiled. "But then, Sir John, I am already a rich woman."

"So I understand," he acknowledged. "But still a hundred thousand pounds is a hundred thousand. Even a millionaire American would not ignore a half million dollars."

"How very true, Sir John. But then two hundred thousand pounds would be two hundred thousand."

"Or three," said Meredith speaking very slowly. "Or four. . ."

He watched the girl's eyes as he made his final bid. "Or five, Madame. One million pounds for the return of the Sulu-necklace. And that is the final offer."

"One million pounds, Sir John," she repeated. "It's a huge fortune, isn't it?"

Right then and there Mr. Hertzler began a search of the high school records and under date of October 1st, he replied to Mr. Maxwell's letter as follows in part:

"The ring you found was lost by Carmella Lena Giagnacova, now known as Mrs. Carmella Rocco, of 1253 Radcliffe street, Bristol, Pa. I have informed her of your unusual discovery and no doubt you have heard from her. If not kindly send the ring in my care and I will return it to her."

"Several things made our search difficult. First, our graduate lists for February and June of the year 1930, included no one with the given initials. Since class rings are obtained in the Junior year the next thought was, did the person quit school or fail to be promoted. Our 1931 graduate list included no one of the initials C. M. G. An M. G. was our best approach. Finally uncovered the fact that while in school she did not use her first name 'Carmella.'"

Mr. Hertzler visited Mrs. Rocco and when she and her husband were made acquainted with the facts they were delighted.

Mrs. Rocco today in discussing the incident stated that shortly after graduation she secured a position with the Manhattan Soap Co., and was asked by a friend to show her her class ring. The friend slipped the ring on her own finger and wore it for a while. Later Mrs. Rocco asked for the return of the ring and her friend was amazed when she went to take it off her finger to find it gone.

The finding of the ring in the box of soap chips leads to the theory that it slipped off the girl's hand while she was engaged in the packing of the chips.

After the ring had been returned to Mrs. Rocco, Mr. Maxwell wrote that it had been found in a box of soap chips a few years ago and at that time it was intended to write to the Bristol school at once in an attempt to identify the owner. "We laid the ring aside and just neglected doing it, I guess it was one of those things one sometimes puts off until tomorrow," writes Mr. Maxwell.

The ring was later found by a daughter of the Maxwells and then it was decided to write at once.

Expressing regret that the return of the ring had so long been delayed Mr. Maxwell thanked Mr. Hertzler for his untiring efforts to locate the owner.

RESOLUTION

Whereas, Divine Providence has called to his eternal reward our late Director and Vice-President, Dr. Horace Fleckenstein.

Now Therefore Be It and It Is Hereby Resolved, by the Board of Directors of The Bristol Trust Company, that in the death of Dr. Horace Fleckenstein this Company, as well as the public at large, has suffered and sustained a great loss. His standing in his profession and his ability and readiness at all times to serve all those who might stand in need of his valued services, his genial manner, pleasant personality, and even temperament endeared him to his friends, and made his position secure in his professional, business and social life. He was active, not only in the practice of his profession, but also in the social, political and fraternal life of the community.

"Dams" Such as These Trap Eels in Pennsylvania Streams

Eels are a toothsome delicacy in many sections of Pennsylvania. They are captured during their fall migrations in such dams as pictured above.

By his death this Company has lost the services of one of its most faithful and efficient officers, the medical profession has lost a valued practitioner and member, and the community has lost a public-spirited citizen.

Be It Further Resolved, That this resolution be spread upon the minutes, and a copy be presented to the members of his family, to whom we extend our sincerest sympathy in this their sad bereavement.

Be It Further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be also published in The Bristol Courier.

1,000 Men Now Trained To "Keep 'em Rolling"

As fast as the army receives new vehicles for its rapidly-growing mobile army, specially-trained service and repair men now are being dispatched to army camps every month to "keep 'em rolling."

More than 1,000 privates and non-commissioned officers have been graduated from special four-week training schools in Akron, Ohio, where The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company has sponsored a special school for the Quartermaster's division of the army during the last eight months.

Utilizing the facilities set up by the rubber industry, these army men attend classes and then apply their learnings to actual work under all kinds of field conditions.

From camps all over the country, men are dispatched to the Rubber Capital for thorough instruction in the care and repair of tires, wheels, brakes, spark plugs and batteries. Special classes also are conducted to teach the men how to retread and recap tires.

Upon receiving certificates of efficiency, many of these men have returned to camps to conduct classes in the army, while others have been assigned to the maintenance of specific contingents of the nation's mobile army.

We Believe You Should Know These Facts

SINCE NATIONAL DEFENSE has first call on copper, aluminum, zinc and other materials, drastic cuts are being made in the manufacture of telephone wire, cables, switchboards and other telephone equipment.

This means that we must seriously restrict the construction of additional telephone plant needed at this time. It is not unlikely that before long this will result in some shortages and delays in telephone service—in spite of all we have done, are doing or can do to prevent them.

This situation is particularly serious because of record-breaking demands for telephone service. We in Pennsylvania are now serving more telephones and handling more calls than ever before.

Thus far, we have been able to handle the staggering loads for three reasons.

First, because we have been using the "margins" of extra plant which we normally provide for growth and for emergencies.

Second, because we have greatly increased our forces. We have added 3,300 men and women to our organization here in Pennsylvania so far this year.

Third, because for many months, we have been adding new plant and equipment at the rate of some $100,000 a working day!

But for a long time, growth has been far above normal and our margins of extra plant have in many points been depleted.

Now, because of shortages of metals, there are growing limitations on continued expansion of our plant. We are no longer able to build as fast as the demands for service continue to soar.

Far-sighted research by the Bell Laboratories has provided substitutes for some of the materials we require. These substitutes help—but cannot solve—the problem. We must face the important fact that there is no suitable substitute for copper for telephone wires.

WE DO NOT BELIEVE this situation will—to any great extent—affect the service of our present customers immediately. But in case you do experience occasional delays, we want you to know the reason for them.

We ask you to believe that we are doing everything in our power to keep your telephone service fast and adequate in the face of serious problems.

with an all-comedy cast headed by Robert Young, Ruth Hussey, Felix Bressart and Lee Bowman.

Opening today on the Grand screen, "Married Bachelor" tells the story of a get-rich-quick schemer who becomes a national idol by a fluke. After becoming a celebrated "ladies' man" he is finally forced to expose himself over a nation-wide radio hook-up to save his own marriage.

BRISTOL THEATRE

"Sun Valley Serenade," new entertainment inspiration starring Sonja Henie and John Payne is the new attraction due today at the Bristol Theatre.

With most of the scenes set on the sunny, snowy slopes of the nation's glorious vacation-land, "Sun Valley Serenade" is a gay, romantic musical with new skate and ski surprises.

RITZ THEATRE

Vicki Lester, who plays a leading role in "You're Out of Luck," starring Frankie Darro and Mantan Moreland, at the Ritz Theatre, had no idea of becoming a movie star until she received a contract in the mail.

The other Ritz offering is "Topper"

BRISTOL GIRLS' HOCKEY TEAM PLAYS BENSALAM

Puts Up Excellent Showing and Holds Opponents to 2 to 0 Score

GAME WELL PLAYED

Alice King and Regina Sliwa Do The Scoring

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Nov. 19.—The Bristol high school girls' hockey team made an excellent showing here yesterday as it held the Bensalem Junior Varsity to a 2-0 score.

It marked Bristol's first hockey game in many seasons and indications point to a successful season next year. Both coaches, Miss Helen Smith, Bensalem, and Miss Phyllis Kallenbach, Bristol, used mostly juniors and sophomores in their line-ups.

For three periods of the tilt, the Bristol team held the Bensalemites scoreless and in the final session, Alice King and Regina Sliwa shot the puck past the Bensalem goalies for scores.

King was first to score for the Bensalem maids when she dribbled most of the field and then drawing Moffo out of position batted the ball into the net. Sliwa received a pass from her front line to convert it into a goal.

After the game, Coach Kallenbach stated that she was "rather surprised at the wonderful manner in which her girls played under competition."

Bristol teams are usually considered to have strong defenses, but followers of the Bunnies have noticed this year that they also have an offense. These three may well be called the "Spearhead" of the Bristol attack.

ments; for lying about his mother's health.

His is not really to blame for any of the reasons. He had to cheat from George's paper because his mother said that he could go to a dance with the prettiest girl in school under one condition; and that condition was that he should have the highest mark in the class in the history examination. George Bigelow, one of the smartest boys in the class sat in back of him. Temptation overtook Henry.

He was accused of stealing band instruments but he really didn't. His name appeared on the pawn ticket from the place the instruments were pawned, after being stolen. His name was forged by his enemy, George Bigelow.

Henry never does what he is told. He also tries to find some way out of work. He is sloppy about himself and his hair is never combed. He speaks frankly and freely. He never stands up straight but is always tangled up in his seat. He and his studies never get along. His appearance on the whole is very poor. He talks as if he was scared and always is clearing his throat. He is constantly being scolded by his teacher.

school graduates to State College, and when you stop to think that Doylestown high is one of 42 which enjoys the certificate privilege, I think we can feel proud about it," said Mr. Halderman.

The Christmas P. T. A. meeting will be held Monday evening, December 22nd, because the auditorium decorations will be kept intact for the school program, and remove the additional cost of re-decorating as the holiday vacation gets underway Tuesday, December 23rd. School will be resumed Monday, January 5, 1942.

Through the efforts of Mrs. Thomas Ross and Earl J. Frick, instructor of instrumental music in the school, ten high school musicians heard Arturo Toscanini, famed Italian symphony conductor, lead the Philadelphia Orchestra in the Academy of Music in Philadelphia on Saturday night.

The student-musicians, who were under the care of Mr. Frick, included William Kane, Edwin Riebel, Grace and Elizabeth Helsel, Marvin Wasser, Allen Wilson, Beverly Ingham, Dorothy Selner, Gladys Frankfield and Theodore Winkel.

In former years Mrs. Ross managed to get two tickets at a time for high school pupils to attend the symphony, but this season she managed to procure ten at one time.
